

Have you ever faced an eviction in Massachusetts?

You may be able to seal your eviction record!

Did you know...

If you have faced a court eviction, your eviction court record is publicly available on the Trial Court's website.

Even if you won your case, you came to an agreement with your landlord, or your case was dismissed, your court record is publicly available and could be used against you when you are looking for a next place to live.

As of May 5, 2025, a new law will be in effect that allows tenants to “seal” their eviction record in certain types of cases.

“Seal” means that an eviction record will no longer be publicly available.

Whether you can seal your eviction record will depend on the type and outcome of your case.

Protect yourself! Find out more:

SealMyEviction.org

